Kozhikode to host global business, technology summit in January

Press Trust of India
Kozhikode

Kozhikode district will host a two-day global business and technology summit in January 2027, bringing together industry leaders, entrepreneurs, investors and technology professionals to explore emerging opportunities.

The summit Merge Future 2027, organised by the Calicut Forum for Information Technology (CAFIT) in association with Government Cyberpark, will be held at the Calicut Trade Centre here under the theme 'Chase the Change', organisers said on Thursday.

CAFIT President Rifath Rahman said the initiative aimed to transform Kozhikode into one of South India's leading business and IT hubs by 2030, according to a statement.

The organisation has set a target of generating an IT-related turnover of ₹10,000 crore and creating around 50,000 jobs in the sector by then, he said.

The event will feature 60 sessions across three stages, with more than 100 speakers from various sectors. An exhibition showcasing technologies and IT services through 127 stalls will also be organised. The organisers expect more than 10,000 delegates, including industry leaders, startups, entrepreneurs, investors, technology professionals and students, to attend the summit.

Marine heatwaves, shifting fish resources threaten coastal livelihoods, warn scientists

Our Bureau
Kochi

Warming seas, marine heatwaves, shifting fish populations, coral bleaching, algal blooms and increasingly unpredictable ocean conditions are posing mounting challenges to fisheries and coastal livelihoods, marine scientists have warned.

Speaking on the opening day of the international TREVOR SAFARI (Societal Applications in Fisheries and Aquaculture using Remote Sensing Imagery) symposium, scientists called for an integrated approach involving diverse areas of expertise to monitor rapidly changing ocean conditions.

The three-day symposium, hosted by the ICAR-Central Marine Fisheries Research Institute (CMFRI), has brought together over 300 participants from 30 countries, including fisheries scientists, climate and remote sensing experts, and oceanographers.

MONITORING SEAS

They highlighted the need to integrate satellite remote sensing, oceanographic observations, climate models, artificial intelligence and in-situ data to better understand physical and biological changes in marine ecosystems and provide timely advisories and early warnings.

Sophie Seeyavae, CEO of the Partnership for Observation of the Global Ocean (POGO), UK, said technological innovation was essential to developing accurate potential fishing zone advisories, detecting harmful algal blooms, forecasting marine heatwaves, and providing reliable weather and sea-condition alerts to fishing communities.

Emphasising the need to expand ocean observation capabilities, she said building expertise in this area would strengthen climate resilience, water-quality monitoring and fisheries management.

CLIMATE CHANGE

Highlighting the impact of climate change, John A Gittings of the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens, Greece, presented research showing that extreme climate events, particularly marine heatwaves, were driving unusual changes in marine productivity across the world's oceans.

The frequency of extreme events, including storms, droughts, wildfires and heatwaves, had increased in recent decades, resulting in changes in the physiology, abundance, geographical distribution and community structure of marine organisms, he said. Continuous monitoring was therefore essential to identify significant changes in ocean conditions.

The symposium is jointly organised by the Department of Chemical Oceanography of the Cochin University of Science and Technology (CUSAT), Trevor Platt Science Foundation, CMFRI and the Marine Biological Association of India.

EMERGING TECH

In her keynote address, N Aparna, Deputy Director of the National Remote Sensing Centre under the Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO), said India's advanced ocean-observation satellites were strengthening marine ecosystem monitoring. Satellite imagery was helping scientists track El Niño, detect algal blooms and assess ocean productivity.

The emerging applications of India's Ocean Colour Monitor-3 (OCM-3) onboard EOS-06 (Oceansat-3) were helping identify potential fishing zones, she said. The technology could also track variations in chlorophyll-a concentrations, an important indicator of ocean productivity.
